Dear Editor,

I have started to go through your article based about superheroes, but I think there need to be a few tweaks to be made. I am a young member of society adoring heroes and praising them, so I am writing to you today to change your ^{mind} thought about heroes. Firstly, they are our source of protection and our only way to keep us safe. Happily, the crowd ~~was~~ watched the hard work of superman ^{saving} helping a citizen. This career is so helpful to everyone, but you are simply taking them away.

For an instance, the superheroes keep us from danger, as I have been once before. Without these saviors, I would have been killed. That ^{moment of being saved} happens to be ~~the~~ the happiest moment of my life. It was such a terrifying moment from me and my family, ~~I~~ was at the zoo and the gate had been left open, meaning the animals would have escaped. Some things took me and left me in the middle of the road. This was so ^{freaky} ^{Vocab} as there was many cars trying to get past but I was in the way. In a snap of my fingers, Spiderman saved me and put me back with my family. Could you imagine if you were in my shoes?

Thirdly, these are not just saviors but ^{being} inspirational. They are role models to citizens, ^{and} 75% of pupils feel secure with superheroes around. They inspire children to get their grades up. The more I talk about heroes, the more I want to be one. Did you know that there are many superheroes in the world?

I acknowledge that superheroes are classified as perfect but this can also have a downfall on some effects. They destroy buildings but that only happens so people like you and me can be saved. They have so many different traits that make them so extraordinary yet ^{so} heroic. They are ~~our~~ ^{our} saviors!

Overall, thank you for reading my letter, I hope you and your team will change your mind ^{on} ~~and~~ how you think about heroes.

Kind Regards,

Mariam.
